The Grandparent Scam

It starts with a frantic phone call. The caller misleads the grandparent into thinking the caller is their grandchild. The “grandchild” claims to be in trouble –often in Canada- and in desperate need of money. The caller asks the grandparent to wire them thousands of dollars so they can post bail or hire an attorney due to a drug or alcohol related arrest, repair their car due to an accident or pay for medical bills.

The “grandchild” will often plead to the grandparent not to tell the “grandchild’s” parents about the situation. The caller will also pressure the grandparent to act quickly. Sadly, the caller is not their grandchild but a con artist. All around the country, well-meaning and caring grandparents have wired thousands of dollars to these con-artists. The con artists have found taking advantage of a grandparent’s love for their grandchild is very profitable.

It is estimated that American grandparents lost $4.5 million dollars in 2009 to this type of scam. In one incident, a well-intentioned grandparent lost $19,000 to a scammer posing as their grandchild and the grandchild’s attorney.

If you receive one of these phone calls, do not give the caller any information. The caller may say “Hi grandma/grandpa, it’s me” or “Hi grandma/grandpa, do you know who this is” and let the grandparent fill in the name of their grandchild. Always make the person tell you their name or ask which grandchild you are speaking to. The caller will realize they cannot continue on with the charade and will likely hang up.

From The Desk Of Commander Bill Wilton

Every day, women, men and children across America suffer the pain and trauma of sexual assault. From verbal harassment and intimidation to molestation and rape. This crime occurs far too frequently, goes unreported far too often and leaves long- lasting physical and emotional scars. During National Sexual Assault Awareness Month, we recommit ourselves not only to lifting the veil of secrecy and shame surrounding sexual violence, but also to raising awareness, expanding support for victims and strengthening our response.

Sexual violence is an affront to our national conscience, one which we cannot ignore. It disproportionately affects women. An estimated one in six American women will experience an attempted or completed rape at some point in her life. Many men and boys are also affected.

These facts are deeply troubling, and yet, sexual violence affects Americans of all ages, backgrounds and circumstances. Alarming rates of sexual violence occur among young women attending college, and frequently, alcohol or drugs are used to incapacitate the victim. As a Nation, we share the responsibility for protecting each other from sexual assault, supporting victims when it does occur and bringing perpetrators to justice.

At the Federal, State and local level we must work to provide necessary resources to victims of every circumstance. As we continue to confront this crime, let us reaffirm this month our dedication to take action in our communities and stop abuse before it starts. Together, we can increase awareness about sexual violence, punish offenders, help victims and heal lives.

On a rare occasion, the caller may provide the name of a grandchild, which they may have obtained off a social networking hub or personal website/web page. Ask the caller to provide information only your grandchild would know. Also, call your grandchild and relatives to confirm your "grandchild's" story.

If you have been a victim of a scam, report it to your local police department. If the caller requested you to send or wire money to Canada, also contact the Canadian Anti- Fraud Centre (CAFC) at 1-888-495-8501 or online through the PhoneBusters site at www.phonebusters.com.

Chain Emails

We have all received a chain e-mail. The e-mails claims that if we forward it onto friends or others, something good will happen or it will show that we care about or support the sender or the subject. These chain e-mails often appeal to our emotions or sense of security. Despite how innocent or well-intentioned the e-mail may seem, it may actual be quite malicious.

Aside from cluttering up an inbox, slowing down servers and wasting bandwidth, chain e-mails can place you at risk for scams and identity theft. Each time you forward a chain e-mail to others on your contact list (and like-wise so do all other recipients) you are giving your e-mail address to many other e-mail users, including spammers.

Even if you delete all the e-mail addresses out of the e-mail before you forward it to your contacts, there is a good chance some others on the list may blindly hit forward without deleting anyone's e-mail addresses. Your e-mail address will be passed along to others without your consent. Your e-mail address may end up in the inbox of a scammer or spammer. They now have an opportunity to send an array of spam your way in an attempt to obtain your personal information or offer you a good deal on a Rolex. Be aware that chain e-mail might also contain an imbedded virus or data miner, which you will pass along to others on your contact list.

So what should you do? Do not forward the e-mail to your contacts, delete it before you open it. You may also want to ask the person who forwarded the email to you to not do so in the future.
